Russian troops in Cuba don't present a military threat to the U.S. or the hemisphere, Adlai Stevenson, U.S. Ambassador to the UN, said on the ABC-TV program, Adlai Stevenson Reports. Sen. Fulbright (D., Ark.), appearing with Stevenson on the show, agreed with him and accused the GOP of partisan politics in charging that the estimated 17,000 troops in Cuba are a threat.

Allen Dulles, former director of the Central Intelligence Agency, said he sees no chance that the people of Cuba or any Iron Curtain country will successfully revolt against Communist rule. Dulles, who headed the CIA during the unsuccessful 1961 invasion of Cuba, also denied that the CIA counted on a popular uprising in Cuba in the wake of the invasion.
